Review & Outlook of Market Performance

Starting the week, the Hang Seng Index rebounded to above the 14,000 level driven by good performance in shares of non-ferrous metal and China developers. However, Hong Kong equities tracked a slump in the US stock market and traded sharply lower on Tuesday. On Wednesday, Hong Kong shares edged up again, tracking a rebound in the US market, led by heavyweights and China financials, which were supported by Huijin and pension fund buying news. On Thursday, Hong Kong shares closed lower again as local developers got sell-off but financial stocks rose after Chinese government announced a 9-point plan to stimulate the economy. On Friday, Hong Kong shares rallied on talks of having more measures from the PRC government to spur the economy. Over the week, the Hang Seng Index fell 42.15 points or 0.3% to 13,846.09, while the HSCEI rose 3.07% to 7,428.54. Market volume remained low with the daily average of mainboard turnover down further by 6.1% w-o-w to just HK$39.5 billion.

In response to the pervasive economic gloom, many central banks had aggressive rate cut during the week, including Sweden, New Zealand, England, ECB and Australia, slashing interest rates by 1.75%, 1.5%, 1%, 0.75% and 1%, respectively. Meanwhile, share prices of local property developers were hit hard following banks' raising their interest rates for new mortgages. SHKP, NWD, Hung Lung dived 11.49%, 10.66% and 9.82% w-o-w. However, financial stocks jumped on positive outlook of loan lending businesses and China's plan to stabilise its stock market and ensure liquidity in the banking system. ICBC gained 7.11% while CCB rose 7.82%. China Life rose 8.32%, while Ping An soared 13.85% and PICC surged 38.66%. Apart from that, R&F Properties also jumped by 34.52% to close at HK$6.43. Chinese telecom shares were also very active on renewed speculations that 3G licences will be issued by the end of this year. China Mobile rose 6.19% and China Telecom was up 2.71% but China Unicom lost 5.02%.

Looking ahead, although trading is fairly quiet, sentiment has generally stayed positive following the latest accommodative policies implemented by the central banks and China's latest efforts to stabilize its stock market. Nevertheless, it should take a while for us to see their effectiveness. We see the HSI to trade between 13,500 to 14,200 in the near term.
